

Stolen

Stolen is an ode to architecture and an elegant expression of the feminine allure.

The Singapore-based womenswear label was founded in 2007 by Elyn Wong, an established figure in Singapore's design and art industries.

Taking its name from a philosophical teaching of Mahatma Gandhi, which proposes that taking more than what is needed equates to stealing, the Stolen label is inspired by this idea of possessing the minimum. Only that which is necessary; nothing gratuitous, and nothing wasted.

Stolen silhouettes are therefore pure and minimalist rather than superfluous. No needless embellishments, no frivolous ornamentation. An exposed back, revealing one of the most elegant parts of the feminine body, has become the recognisable signature detail of a Stolen garment.

Impervious to trends, Elyn's garments constantly challenge the distinction between fashion and art, acting as sculptural fabric vessels to accentuate the sensuality, fragility and strength of the modern woman.

Having already gained a cult following amongst Singapore's tastemakers and fashion insiders, Stolen is also currently stocked in New York, L.A., Hong Kong, Malaysia, Vietnam, and China.

It is fast gaining international exposure as one of the few labels representing Singapore in prestigious events like the Tranoi trade show in Paris and Coterie's TMRW section in New York, as well as being invited to international trade shows, exhibitions and creative projects in Italy, Hong Kong, China and Switzerland.

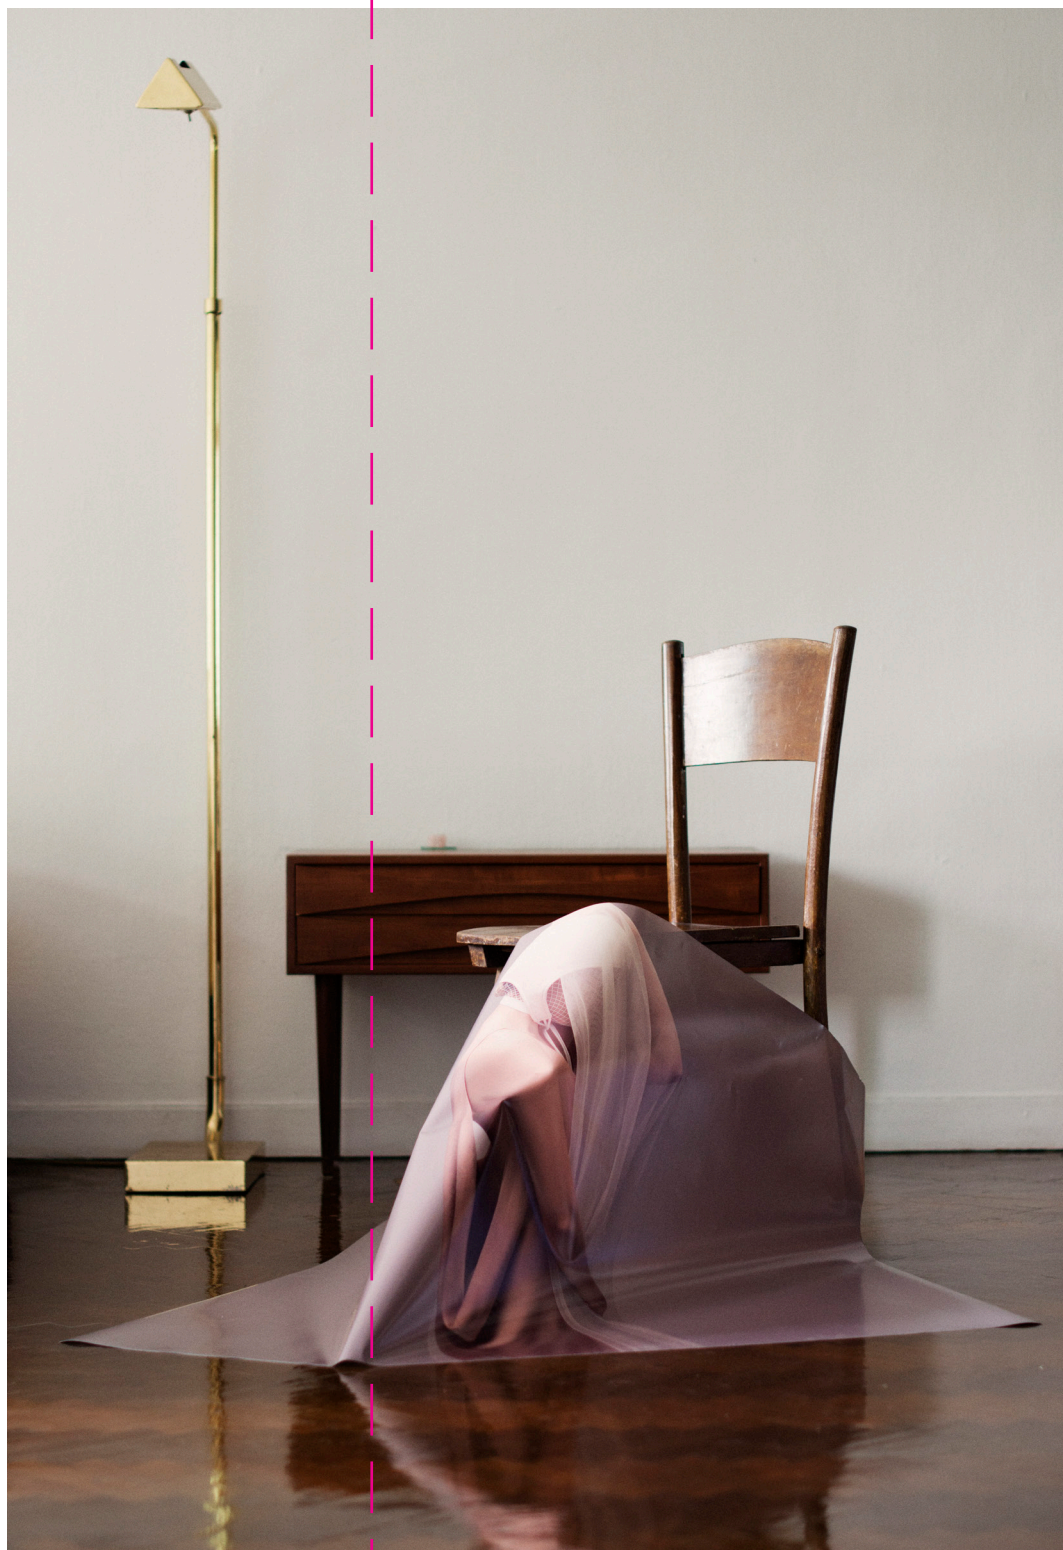

“ What you wear can change your state of mind - you can be attractive or empowered. It changes the way you feel, or how people perceive you ... And that's kind of magical. ”

"I suggest that we are thieves in a way. If I take anything that I do not need for my own immediate use, and keep it, I thief it from somebody else ... A thing not originally stolen must nevertheless be classified stolen property, if one possesses it without needing it."
